The founder of The Carter Malone Group says it’s been phenomenal to see how far she’s come in the 20 years since opening her business. Coming from a family of entrepreneurs, Deidre Carter Malone decided it was time to have something of her own as well, and after leaving her successful career as a marketing executive with ALSAC St. Jude Children’s Research Hospital, she founded her firm in May 2003.

“You look up and it’s 20 years later, you don’t think about it when you have your head down, doing the work,” Malone says. “I remember five years in I thought to myself, ‘Am I going to keep doing this?’ I could easily go work for somebody else and make great money, but the more I thought about the types of clients that I was taking on, and the opportunity to grow the firm, I stuck with it.”

Although she left her position at St. Jude, Malone continued to serve her community as a Shelby County commissioner. Yet, her experience trying to start her company while running for her position again proved more difficult than she thought.

“The Republican that was running in my race, tried to call my clients and have them try and convince me not to run, and it had a negative impact on my business,” Malone said. Although she chose her business, Malone still loves service and was just elected the National President of the National Women's Political Caucus, founded by Gloria Steinem, Shirley Chisholm, and Fannie Lou Hamer.

TMG’s first client was the National Baptist Convention Inc. in Nashville, TN. Malone says the same day she took on this client was the same day she decided to leave her job to start her firm. The convention was such a success that the former Baptist of the Church of God in Christ called the news station, Action News 5, to see if they could be represented by her firm as well.

“My pastor was a member of the hosted committee, and he knew that I had a background in PR, he did not know that I was leaving St. Jude to start my own business, but he found out that day, and it was just amazing - it was nothing but God really,” Malone says. “20 years later, the local host committee for the National Baptist Convention is coming back to Memphis and they called me about six weeks ago, so my first client is coming back.”
From representing two denominations, TMG’s clientele expanded representing the Tennessee Valley Authority, the University of Tennessee, The Blue Cross Blue Shield of Tennessee, BlueOval City Ford Company, and one of her favorite clients, New York attorney Gloria Brown Marshall.

The Carter Malone Group offers an array of solutions for brand building and community engagement. Their talented staff develop effective strategies from large-scale media relations to focus groups, delivered across a multitude of platforms, including social media, website building and management, audio, video, and print. The firm is also the recipient of 43 awards including the 2022 Minority Marketing and Communications Firm of the Year from the Minority Business Development Agency. They are also the first business in Memphis to receive a MED Week Award.

The MED Week Awards are the highest national recognition that a U.S. minority-owned firm can receive from the Department of Commerce and celebrate the outstanding achievements of minority entrepreneurs.

“When we were nominated for the award last year, I was floored, it was so exciting and I told Jozelle and her team, ‘we are so humbled,’ because I know the clients that we have are great, they're not just here in the south, they are across the country, but there are other agencies like ours across this country too that are putting in the work,” Malone said. “It was beautiful and I was very honored.”

CMG became a client of Tennessee MBDA nearly 15 years ago when she first started her business. When Jozelle Booker became president of TMBDA, Malone says she did a phenomenal job reaching out to minority businesses to understand how they can better improve their outreach and services.

“One of the things she asked me to do, and I did it Pro Bono, of course, was facilitate discussions with minority business owners and they were very candid about what they needed,” Malone says. “Every opportunity in my industry that exists that they know about, they share it with people in our industry, and they don't advocate one way or the other for the business but they share information so you can advocate for yourself.”

Malone plans to retire in the “next five years or so” and hopes to pass it on to a family member to make it a family legacy and hopes they can take it to “the next level.”

“My oldest son works for me, my youngest son has worked for me and my daughter-in-law, who has been in finance for over 12 years, has now joined the firm as the director of business operations so it truly is integrated into my family,” Malone says.
